In "Setting Reasonable Expectations," an article in the December Edward Jones Perspective newsletter, we answer that question. You can read the article at www.edwardjones.com/settingexpectations.

Quest for Value: Uncovering Opportunities in Today's Market

With the market recently reaching all-time highs, you may be left wondering, "Where do we go from here?" We still believe you can find attractive opportunities in the stock market, but you may have to dig a little deeper to find value.

Here are three investment paths you may want to consider:

1. Stocks That Are Out of Favor
Some stocks simply haven't kept pace with the market because the trends that lifted the market didn't help them as much. But some of today's "out of favor" stocks and sectors have potential for improved performance.

2. Stocks with Catalysts for Improving Performance
Some stocks underperformed for a company-specific reason in 2013. Weaker-than-expected fundamentals may have caused other underperforming stocks to lag. But we believe they can improve their performance heading into 2014.

3. Stocks That Have Performed Well but Still Appear Attractive
Even though stocks overall have already performed reasonably well this year, we believe some continue to be attractive. Given these companies' potential for future sales and earnings growth, we believe their current stock prices still represent good value. We think it's not too late to buy some quality companies.

Set Your Course Today
While it may not be as easy to find values in today's market, we believe that by following the tried-and-true principles of fundamental stock selection, you can find attractive investments to add to your portfolio. Talk with your Edward Jones financial advisor about what investments might be right for you. To read this entire report, visit www.edwardjones.com/quest.
