The Gift That Keeps Giving

With the holidays approaching, you may want to consider gifting an investment – such as a stock or bond – to a family member or civic, religious or educational institution. Such a gift can benefit you as the donor, as well as the recipient. For more information regarding charitable gifts, contact your financial advisor. Pockets of Risk in Today's Market

Stock markets have performed extremely well over the past several years due to the economic rebound and strong corporate profits. Bond markets have also done well, as falling interest rates have acted as a "wind at the back" for rising bond prices.

Despite the markets' strong performance and lack of a correction since the summer of 2011, we don't believe the current market is overvalued. In fact, based on strong corporate profit growth and current market levels, we believe the broader stock market still offers attractive opportunities. However, we currently see two small pockets of risk in today's market – U.S. small-cap stocks and high-yield bonds.

Small-cap Stocks

Small-cap stocks, short for small-capitalization stocks, are those of smaller companies. While specific definitions vary, a company's stock is classified as small-cap if its total stock value is below $3 billion. Small-cap stocks tend to be riskier than larger, more mature companies. Small-cap stocks can be attractive because they can offer growth potential and provide diversification benefits as a small portion of an investor's overall portfolio. However, because of their risks, we recommend investors gain exposure to these investments through professionally managed mutual funds.

High-yield Bonds

High-yield bonds are offered by smaller, distressed or non-investment-grade companies or municipalities that pay higher interest rates to compensate investors for the higher risk involved. In today's low interest rate environment, investors have sought out higher-yielding investments, including high-yield bonds, in an attempt to find higher income. Although high-yield bonds offer higher rates of return, the trade-off is usually greater price volatility and greater default risk, meaning the company isn't able to make interest payments to investors.

The improving economy has aided the strong performance of high-yield bonds over the past several years. But as more people have invested in high-yield bonds, pushing prices up, the amount of extra income investors receive for taking on the additional risk has narrowed. Thus, investors may not be adequately compensated for that higher risk. Going forward, we expect high-yield bonds to have lower returns and higher potential risk.

Review Your Situation to Stay On Track

If you own these investments, talk with your financial advisor to review your situation and determine what action to take.

Investing in stocks and mutual funds involves risks. Share values fluctuate, and you may lose principal. Diversification does not guarantee a profit or protect against loss.
